The Construction Industry is contributing significantly to the CO2 emissions, and so is the Deep Foundation Industry. With sustainability becoming more relevant each and every day, we, as a profession, have a role to play to reduce our emissions. Decarbonization is the first option: more efficient design reducing volumes of concrete or steel, and the use of different materials with lower carbon footprint. However, this should not be viewed as the only option available: the reuse of existing foundations must be considered as well, and even preferred as the most sustainable option.

In March 2023, DFI Europe and the Geotechnical Section of the KIVI organized a very successful 3-day conference to discuss these burning topics in Amsterdam, The Netherlands. This was the occasion to share recent experiences and good practices to raise the level of the industry in this challenging matter. The organizers want to keep the pace and the second conference on this topic is now scheduled for May 2024.

We can offer a full program with several interested presentations. This edition a special focus will be given to contractual and insurance aspects. During the lunch and coffee breaks, there will be enough space & time to connect, to inspire each other and to do business.

Join us in Amsterdam, The Netherlands!

Topics
